

THE MAKOR TEACHING GUIDES

Teaching the Youngest Grades

One lesson, one theme, or a year · Free, ready to teach · Grades K–5

Start at your size. One lesson tomorrow: the featured lesson, Where Did the Synagogue Come From?, grades 3 to 5, forty minutes. One theme: six to choose from, each with a Makor lesson, a shelf of verified picture books, and labeled outside resources. The year: nine lessons laid across a scope and sequence at makorproject.org/modules-k5-scope-and-sequence.

Every lesson is built for classrooms and also works at a kitchen table with one child. Each words-to-know card ends with a note for families. Every page opens as a clean, print-ready PDF, so handouts are one click.

THE STORY SO FAR, FOR YOU

Five sentences of background for you, the teacher. The K–5 lessons themselves introduce Jewish life and culture the way the early grades introduce any people. The hatred is not a K–5 subject, and the program says plainly what belongs at this age and what does not: makorproject.org/k5.

1. The Jews are a people, with a faith, a language, and a calendar, three thousand years old. /topic-who-are-the-jews

Before you teach: the ground rules

Teaching about a tradition in a public school is settled ground. Public schools teach about religion as history and culture, not as practice. The Supreme Court drew that line in 1963, in Abington School District v. Schempp. The working rule: academic, not devotional. The aim is awareness, not acceptance. The class studies a tradition and does not practice one. The lessons are built that way: a holiday is explained, never observed.

What belongs at this age, and what does not. The Holocaust itself is not the subject here. The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum gears its own teaching materials to grade six and above, and the state commissions whose guidance reaches the early grades start with foundations. Where rescue stories reach the upper elementary grades, the entry point is people helping people, never the camps.

What the commissions ask for. Roughly twenty-nine states require Holocaust education, most of it in middle and high school. Four reach the elementary grades: New Jersey, Illinois, Oregon, and Texas, and their early-grade guidance begins with understanding difference, prejudice, and respect. The Texas commission lists introducing Jewish identity among its elementary themes, so that later Holocaust instruction has ground to stand on. The full section: makorproject.org/k5.

THEME 1 · Who are the Jewish people?

Jews are a people and a civilization, with a shared history, language, homeland, and culture, not only a religion. Families who look different and live in different countries all belong to one global people. A good first answer to “what is a Jew?” is “a member of a very old people,” before it is about belief at all.

THEME 2 · What is Judaism?

The tradition dimension: the Torah as a handwritten scroll, the synagogue as a gathering place, the rhythm of a week that ends with Shabbat. Taught the way the curriculum already teaches any tradition, through what people do and the places they gather, not doctrine.

THEME 3 · What do they believe and celebrate?

Best taught as what a child can see and mark: the holidays across the year, Rosh Hashanah, Hanukkah, Passover, Purim, and the values lived through action: feeding the hungry, welcoming guests, caring for the sick, repairing the world. Values first, holidays beside them: both are visible in a classroom before a single belief needs explaining.

THEME 4 · Jewish communities around the world

Jewish families have lived in Iraq, Yemen, Morocco, Ethiopia, India, Spain, Poland, and the United States, each with its own foods, music, and dress. Seeing that range shows children one people spread across the whole world, not a single image.

THEME 5 · Stories, foods, music, and words

The lived culture a child can taste, hear, and say: folktales, challah and latkes, klezmer and Sephardi song, and the Hebrew and Yiddish words that have entered English. A sensory doorway the youngest students can walk through.

THEME 6 · How Jewish people try to live

Mitzvot, good deeds that are also commandments. Tzedakah, giving as a kind of justice rather than charity. Chesed, kindness no one can repay. Tikkun olam, the idea that the world is ours to help repair. Many of these are values children meet in other traditions too, which makes them a natural place to begin: a familiar idea in an unfamiliar community.

WHAT MAKOR ADDS TO YOUR EARLY GRADES

Jews are about two percent of the country's population, concentrated in a handful of metropolitan areas, so many American children never meet a Jewish family. For them, school is where the first encounter happens, and often that first encounter is the Holocaust, in middle school. This program is the introduction that comes before it: a synagogue, a Shabbat table, the holidays, communities around the world, the words and stories a people carries with it. It is the same kind of introduction the early grades already give to other peoples and cultures, given to Jewish life at the same age.

WHAT MAKOR IS

It's ready. Nine planned lessons with handouts, words-to-know cards, and book lists.

It fits. The space K–5 social studies already gives to world cultures and communities, with no new instructional time.

It's solid ground. Built the way public schools teach about any tradition: academic, not devotional. A Shabbat table is set and described, never blessed.

It's free, with no logins and no ads.

Do I need background?

No. The story so far on page one is your background, each lesson guide says what to say, and every words-to-know card defines its terms. If you can lead a read-aloud, you can teach these.

If a parent asks

The class studies a tradition and does not practice one, the same way it studies any community's holidays and foods. A holiday is explained, never observed. The rule is public, on the program page, and it is the same rule public schools use for every tradition.

The classroom toolkit

- The scope and sequence. The nine lessons laid across a school year. makorproject.org/modules-k5-scope-and-sequence
- Handouts and words-to-know cards. Every lesson's printables, linked from its guide, each card ending with a note for families.
- The book shelves. Verified picture books for read-alouds on every theme, folktales to All-of-a-Kind Family, each listed on its theme at makorproject.org/k5.
- The Museum. Manuscripts, coins, and objects, each credited to the institution that holds it. One object, projected, opens a class. makorproject.org/museum
- Virtual Field Trips. Visits to historic sites and Jewish quarters, from your projector. makorproject.org/field-trips

- The Incident Record. Documented antisemitic incidents of the contemporary era, each entry ending with its record: a verdict, a plea, or an official finding. makorproject.org/incident-record
- When symbols and hate enter the classroom. The K–5 page holds a section for the day a swastika or a slur shows up, written for exactly this age. makorproject.org/k5

Where teachers already go

Makor does not duplicate the strong K–5 materials established institutions provide, and the program names them: the Institute for Curriculum Services (free, standards-aligned lessons on Judaism and ancient Israel), PBS LearningMedia (video and lesson resources for elementary classrooms), and Holocaust Museum Houston’s Young Upstanders toolkit for upper-elementary themes of kindness and standing up (preview for fit). Each is linked, and labeled by what it is, on the theme shelves at makorproject.org/k5.

None of this asks for new instructional time. The six themes map to the elementary frameworks most states use, with New York’s K–8 Social Studies Framework as the worked example on the program page.

The Makor Project (makorproject.org) is a free online textbook of Jewish history and the history of antisemitism, built from primary sources. It was built to close a gap: in standard textbooks, the Jewish people appear in the ancient world, then reappear two thousand years later as victims of the Holocaust, a history with no in-between. The K–5 program is where the closing begins: children meet a living people and its culture first, at the same age their classrooms introduce other peoples. If you teach one lesson, tell us how it went: education@makorproject.org.
