TEACH JEWISH HISTORY

THE STANDARDS COMPANION · NEW BRUNSWICK EDITION

In many textbooks, Jews appear as ancient Israelites, then vanish until they reappear as victims of the Holocaust, with a two-thousand-year gap in between.

Teach Jewish History covers what comes between, and after.
Free, source-based, and ready for the courses you already teach.

The site at teachjewishhistory.org: the whole arc of Jewish history, from the Biblical era to the present.

What it is

Teach Jewish History is a free online textbook and teaching companion for Jewish history, civilization, and the evolution of antisemitism, from antiquity through the Holocaust to the present. Six Units and more than 60 classroom-ready Chapters, each with primary sources, discussion questions, curated readings, and a printable PDF, mapped to the standards you already work from. No login, no cost.

Why it exists

In New Brunswick's Anglophone curriculum, Grade 7 Social Studies asks students to research the Holocaust and the human rights decisions that followed, and achievement indicators identify what educators need to teach. Grade 11 Modern History gives the Holocaust a Big Idea of its own, Crimes Against Humanity. A student can reach the Holocaust having met the civilization that was destroyed only in passing, with little sense of how the hatred behind it was built over centuries, or what came after. The site covers the whole arc, before, during, and after, so students meet the Holocaust as the culmination of a history, not its origin. The full case is on The Curriculum Gap.

How to use it, by grade

The site serves three levels from the same body of work. For primary school, the site's K to 5 program adapts the material into themed lessons with read-aloud books and handouts. For secondary school, Grades 6 to 12, the more than 60 Chapters work as textbook chapters: each has a readable history, primary sources and images with full credits, discussion questions, Classroom Connections, and a printable PDF. For university survey courses, the same Chapters carry the primary-source depth and bibliographies to assign directly. Critical-thinking lessons add source-literacy exercises for any level. Each item is a link or a PDF, so you can hand it out on paper, email it, or post it in Google Classroom or any learning platform, with no student login.

A note on order. Where you can, teach a Unit 1 Chapter before Unit 3 or the Hate Symbols guide. The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum asks teachers to show Jewish life first, "so that victims are not perceived only as victims."

Where the site fits the courses you already teach

Every Chapter is mapped to a course. Find the course you teach, and here are the Chapters to pull. The lines quoted here come from the New Brunswick Anglophone curriculum, which has no outcome codes, so lines are cited by grade and course. For a version mapped to another state or country, register on the site or write to education@teachjewishhistory.org.

Professional development

A free, self-paced course, Teaching Jewish History and the Roots of Antisemitism, built entirely from the site. About six hours, taken in any order, ending with a classroom plan you build as you go and a certificate of completion. It draws on the guidelines of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and the IHRA.

Pass it on

Read it. Use it in your classroom. If it works, share it with a colleague, a department, or a district.

A note on standards

The lines in this companion are quoted from the New Brunswick Curriculum Framework, Anglophone sector: Social Studies 6 to 8, Social Studies 9, Civics 10, Ancient and Medieval History, Modern History, Canadian History, and English Language Arts. Skill descriptors and achievement indicators are what educators teach, and contexts and concepts guide their choices. Confirm current wording against the official documents. The site draws on material from established institutions, credits them, and adds original chapters of its own.
