TEACH JEWISH HISTORY

THE STANDARDS COMPANION · WASHINGTON EDITION

In many textbooks, Jews appear as ancient Israelites, then vanish until they reappear as victims of the Holocaust, with a two-thousand-year gap in between.

Teach Jewish History covers what comes between, and after.
Free, source-based, and ready for the courses you already teach.

The site at teachjewishhistory.org: the whole arc of Jewish history, from the Biblical era to the present.

What it is

Teach Jewish History is a free online textbook and teaching companion for Jewish history, civilization, and the evolution of antisemitism, from antiquity through the Holocaust to the present. Six Units and more than 60 classroom-ready Chapters, each with primary sources, discussion questions, curated readings, and a printable PDF, mapped to the standards you already work from. No login, no cost.

Why it exists

A growing number of states require students to learn this history. Many of these laws set a requirement without a curriculum. A student can reach the Holocaust having met the civilization that was destroyed only in passing, with little sense of how the hatred behind it was built over centuries, or what came after. The site covers the whole arc, before, during, and after, so students meet the Holocaust as the culmination of a history, not its origin. The full case is on The Curriculum Gap.

How to use it, by grade

The site serves three levels from the same body of work. For the early grades, the K to 5 program adapts the material into themed, ready-to-teach lessons with read-aloud books and printable handouts. For grades 6 to 12, the more than 60 Chapters work as textbook chapters: each has a readable history, primary sources and images with full credits, discussion questions, Classroom Connections, and a printable PDF. For college survey courses, the same Chapters carry the primary-source depth and bibliographies to assign directly. Critical-thinking lessons add source-literacy exercises for any level. Each item is a link or a PDF, so you can hand it out on paper, email it, or post it in Google Classroom or any learning platform, with no student login.

A note on order. Where you can, teach a Unit 1 Chapter before Unit 3 or the Hate Symbols guide. The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum's teaching guidelines ask teachers to show Jewish life before the Holocaust, "so that victims are not perceived only as victims."

Where the site fits the courses you already teach

Every Chapter is mapped to a course. Find the course you teach, and here are the Chapters to pull. Washington's social studies standards set skills by grade, each grade with a content focus, rather than naming events, so the anchors here are that focus and the standards that fit, with the state's Holocaust law below. For a version mapped to another state or country, register on the site or write to education@teachjewishhistory.org.

Ancient Civilizations

Holocaust Instruction, and the State's Best Practices

MIDDLE AND HIGH SCHOOL · RCW 28A.300.115, UPDATED BY SUBSTITUTE SENATE BILL 5612 (2019)

Washington strongly encourages every middle, junior high, and high school to teach the Holocaust, and schools that do must follow best practices the state developed with the Holocaust Center for Humanity. Its lessons cover the prewar years, flight and rescue, ghettos and camps, and confronting racism and genocide: The Years Before the Killing · Jewish Resistance and Rescue · The Nazi Ghettos · The Camp System.

English and ELA

GRADES 6–12 · WASHINGTON'S ELA STANDARDS (COMMON CORE, ADOPTED 2011): READING STANDARDS FOR LITERACY IN HISTORY AND SOCIAL STUDIES (RH)

Every Chapter supports the close reading of primary sources. Strongest fits for media and information literacy: The Protocols Forgery and Contemporary Antisemitism, plus the critical-thinking lesson The Primary Source vs. the Headline.

Jewish Contributions, from scholarship and science to the arts

GRADES 6–12 AND COLLEGE · UNIT 5

Across the Fields · Moses Mendelssohn · Levi Strauss · Emma Lazarus · Samuel Gompers · Albert Einstein · The Founders of Hollywood · Jonas Salk · with Theodor Herzl, Rashi, Maimonides, and Joseph Karo listed above.

Other ways to weave in the materials

Beyond the core lesson, the materials fit naturally into the rest of classroom life.

- Print-and-go guides.
  The eight Teaching Guides, one per grade band or subject, each opening with a first lesson planned beat by beat and a chart for the course.
- A student club.
  The Makor Club kit turns student interest into a member-led history club: film nights, virtual field trips, an assembly plan, and community service.
- Current-event assignments.
  Pair a story in today's news with the critical-thinking lesson The Primary Source vs. the Headline, or with the Contemporary Antisemitism Chapter, to build media literacy.
- Readings.
  Assign a Chapter page, or a printable chapter from TJH Originals, with its discussion questions, as a reading.
- Films.
  The Films collection gathers documentary viewing for the classroom.
- Field trips.
  Virtual Field Trips visit sites and memorials online, and Chapters also point to local museums and historic synagogues for in-person visits.
- Symbols and misconceptions.
  When they come up, bring in the guide to recognizing Hate Symbols and the Misconceptions reference.
- Explore and reference.
  The online Museum of objects and manuscripts, the interactive Timeline, the Recurring Cycle, and the Glossary support projects, warm-ups, and independent study.
- Extra credit and independent work.
  Any Chapter, with its sources and questions, stands alone as a research or writing assignment.

Professional development

A free, self-paced course, Teaching Jewish History and the Roots of Antisemitism, built entirely from the site. About six hours, taken in any order, ending with a classroom plan you build as you go and a certificate of completion. It draws on the guidelines of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and the IHRA.

Pass it on

Read it. Use it in your classroom. If it works, share it with a colleague, a department, or a district.

A note on standards

The codes in this companion are mapped to Washington's K–12 Social Studies Learning Standards (2019), which set skills by grade rather than naming specific events. The Holocaust entries also draw on RCW 28A.300.115, under which middle and high schools are strongly encouraged to teach the Holocaust. Revised ELA standards are required from the 2027–28 school year. Standards are revised periodically, so confirm the current codes against the official documents. The site draws on material from established institutions, credits them, and adds original chapters of its own.
